Siemens Wireless Modules will become a new legal entity

Dear Ladies and Gentlemen,

Today is a great day for Wireless Modules as we are taking a considerable step in shaping our future. I am pleased to inform you that Siemens AG and the Joma consortium (Joint Operations for Mobile Applications) have signed an agreement that will transform Wireless Modules into a fully stand-alone entity, scheduled to be effective in May of 2008. The effectiveness of the transaction is subject to certain conditions, particularly the approval of anti-trust authorities. This strategic move has been taken to establish a new, more dynamic and future-oriented business platform for our highly successful unit.

Joma, funded by T-Ventures (investment vehicle of Deutsche Telekom), the private Equity Partner Granville Baird and Sapfi Kapital Management, fully supports Wireless Modules' s strategy and will open a network of industry connections to Wireless Modules, keen to develop our fast growing industry and provide increased value to our customers. We will draw strategic strength from this partnership and prove once again that we are the first to take such an innovative step forward.

I am enthusiastic that this investment will further stimulate product and service innovation for the benefit of our customers. It will provide us with the level of independence we need in this dynamic and fast moving market to supply our customers with the most innovative and high-quality products. It will also enable us to develop the company even further with future-oriented strategies.

With the strategic move to bring Joma on board, we will become a more flexible and lean organization focused strictly on one issue: supporting you in developing your business. Our success is built on your success.
